English children are required to be in full time education between the ages of 5 and 16. Some receive their primary education at an infant school and then a junior school whereas others receive it at a primary school that combines both. About 94 per cent of pupils in the U.K receive free education from public funds, while 6 per cent attend independent fee-paying schools. At the age of 11, they move on to regular high school, known as secondary schools. At the age of 16, students sit for an examination called GCSE (General Certificate of Secondary Education). All students are tested in mathematics, English literature, English composition, chemistry, biology, physics, history or the classics, one modern language, and one other subject, such as art or computer studies.

After completing the GCSE, some students leave school, others go to technical college "whilst" others continue at high school for two more years and take a further set of standardized exams, known as A levels, in three or four subjects. These exams determine whether a student is eligible for university.
