Coca-Cola was first introduced as a fountain syrup on the 1890s, and the name, the symbol, and the colour quickly became an integral part of the American scene. The outdoor billboards, the posters, and the advertisements on back covers of the Saturday Evening Post all helped make Coca-Cola the best known soft drink in the world.

Coke ads have appeared on lorry panels, walls of buildings lamp shades, clock faces, pencil boxes and serving trays. Coca-Cola was, and continues to be, almost everywhere one looks. Beautiful people in ads and posters have, in effect said “Coke and I are the best of 1900 or 1926 or 2000.”

The bright red metal open top coke introduced its famous six-pack; it was convenient for the consumer and an excellent way to sell six bottles of coke instead of one.
